Tale of Two Livers

---

Danielle Wallace, MD

Two sets of lemon-tinted eyes staring
Back at me from adjacent hospital beds
Numbers interchangeable, characters distinct.

One, an alcoholic, drank and disregarded until
His skin resembled the lagers he loved
And his organs floated in fluid.

The other, a nurse, years ago reached out
To hold a hand and instead met a needle
With the virus that would victimize her.

I ask the same questions, do the same exams
Prescribe the same medications to these patients
With different pasts but similar presents.

Next morning, the nurse is wild-eyed, confused
Watching in terror as her shaking hands slip
Through mine, I lose her in an ammoniac sea.

Next door, the alcoholic is aware, calm,
Watching football as I drain amber ascites
From his distended body, he sighs in relief.

I choke back my own bile at this unfairness.
But who am I to say whose liver deserved to live?
